

Nuance Spotlight: Jane Austen

Patrick Barry

University of Michigan Law School
Clinical Assistant Professor of Law

© Patrick Barry

Except where otherwise noted, this work is licensed under

<http://creativecommons.org/licenses/by-nc/4.0/>

Manners

Aspirations

“Benchmark”

Sentences

Manners Nuance Spotlight Aspirations

Sentences

“There would be more genuine rejoicing at the discovery of a completely new novel by Jane Austen than any other other listerary discovery, short of a new major play by Shakespeare.”

Samples

Samples

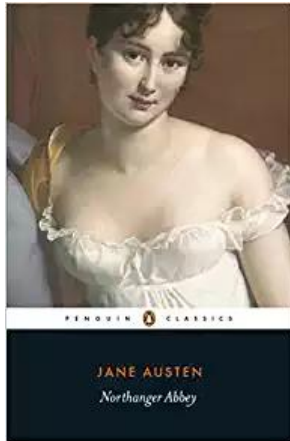

- “as”

“[T]he luckless Kitty continued in the parlour repined at her fate in terms as unreasonable as her accent was peevish.”

Samples

- “if not”

“[T] seemed to be about to be about four or five and twenty, was rather tall, had a pleasing countenance, a very intelligent and lively eye and, if not quite handsome, was very near it.”